

(E) Around the World in Armenian (1/2) [15 Points]

Armenian, the official language of Armenia, is part of the Indo-European language family, the language family that contains most European languages like English and Russian, as well as many South Asian languages like Punjabi and Hindi. Its alphabet, developed in the early 5th century CE, is also related to the Latin alphabet we use for English, since both descend from an archaic form of the Greek alphabet.

Below are the names of several of the world's countries in the Armenian script, and their English equivalents in a random order. Note that some of the names of countries are slightly different in the Armenian language.
