Bulgarian is a Slavic language and, along with the closely related Macedonian language, has several characteristics that set it apart from all other Slavic languages. Old Bulgarian was a highly synthetic language; synthetic languages express meaning by building complex words from smaller pieces. Modern day Bulgarian is a typical analytic language, one which expresses meaning more with word order, like English. Bulgarian currently uses the Cyrillic script, created after the older Glagolitic alphabets. In this problem, a Roman transliteration is used. The letter 'ă' represents the vowel in the English word but.

Here are some sentences given in Bulgarian and the translated equivalents (in no particular order) in English.
